There are so many reasons autumn in nature is amazing: cooler temperatures, fewer “nuisance” bugs, fall bird migration... The list goes on and on. But one of the most spectacular aspects of fall in the Forest Preserves of Cook County is the color that takes hold amongst our tree canopies and natural areas.

Did you know you can find some of our top recommendations to see fantastic fall color by using our Fall Color filter on our web map? Simply visit map.fpdcc.com from your desktop or phone and select Fall Color. You'll be directed to a curated list of our staff's top-rated fall color hot spots.

If fall color isn't reason enough to spend time exploring the Preserves this season, we also have an incredible slate of special events and programs. This guide has information on festivals and “spooky” Halloween happenings, peaceful art programs wellness or nature education walks, and so much more.

We hope to see you in the Preserves!

Fall is the Perfect Time to Ride the Volunteer Bus

The Forest Preserves offers a free transportation option for schools, community groups and nonprofits looking to experience nature and give back. The Volunteer Voyager program provides a bus to pick up and return your group for a litter clean-up or ecological stewardship day!

“We don’t want transportation to be a barrier to participating in volunteering in the Forest Preserves,” says Emily Russell, a volunteer program coordinator with the Forest Preserves. “Volunteering allows you to experience the forest preserves in a more intimate way. You are walking in areas you wouldn’t normally walk, and you notice things as you engage with the land.”

Litter cleanups are self-guided and can be undertaken by all ages at almost any forest preserve. Russell says that fall is the perfect time, given cooling weather, fewer bugs and the beauty of the season.

Alicia Quintero, a Spanish teacher at Walter Payton College Prep in Chicago, relished the opportunity last May to take her homeroom students to a litter cleanup on their annual community service “Sweetness Day.” Many had never visited the Forest Preserves before.

“They were so enamored of the beauty,” Quintero says. “It was just very peaceful. That’s something they took away, that there are these oases in the city. They saw people riding bikes, walking and enjoying nature. This generation, these kids, probably do not spend 10 minutes without their phones.”

Greta Kringle, a science teacher and former volunteer coordinator at Eric Solorio Academy High School in Chicago, takes her students to the Forest Preserves for environmental stewardship. They spend a Saturday learning about invasive plant species and then helping to remove them.

“It’s a great way to get students playing. They’re finding weird bugs; they’re making observations. Another big thing is not science-related at all—it’s students having to depend on each other, and work with each other in a way that’s hard to recreate in the classroom,” she says.

The upcoming months are the best time of year to volunteer for ecological restoration, with opportunities for seed collecting in the fall and brush clearing all winter long. Spring brings wildflowers, migrating birds and wet soil, so the brush clearing ends for the season.

Create Your Own Trail Adventure

There are more than 350 miles of trails throughout the Forest Preserves of Cook County. And their uses are as diverse as the people of Cook County, from an outdoor workout to a source of inspiration to a place to be with friends and family.

Find your nearest trail or a new place to explore with our interactive web map: map.fpdcc.com.

BE MINDFUL

Find a nice spot on the journey to stop and soak in the view. Try meditating or sitting quietly while basking in the environment. You can bring a notebook to journal about your observations and thoughts.

CONNECT TO CREATIVE INSPIRATION

With lush canopies, stunning flowers, captivating wildlife and serene landscapes, it's no wonder Bob Ross focused on nature. Whether you paint, write, make music or any other artistic endeavor—or want to start—let the landscapes along the trail inspire you!

SPEND TIME WITH A DOG

Forest Preserves trails are the perfect place for on-leash dogs get in a good workout. With so many new smells and sights, a walk in nature will work their brains, and all those miles will work their legs!

BRING YOUNG EXPLORERS

Kids are constantly learning, and there is no better classroom than nature. Take a walk in the woods with your kids and talk about what you're seeing, hearing, smelling and feeling. Consider a trail at a nature center to discuss their findings with a naturalist.
